Farmingville, NY - On April 14, Brookhaven Town Councilman Dan Panico addressed an honors class at St. Joseph's College, taught by Professor Chad Lupinacci.

"I am always happy to make myself available to speak to our youth regarding my role as an elected official in Town government and how government at all levels affects people's lives," commented Brookhaven Town Councilman Dan Panico. "This marked the third occasion that I had the opportunity to address a college class at St. Joseph's. I was again impressed with the student's perceptive nature of their government and the array of subjects that were of importance. This time the discussion ranged from a series of topics that included local government, tax caps, and school budgets."

St. Joseph's College is located in Patchogue at the intersection of Sunrise Highway and Waverly Avenue.

"Councilman Panico again knocked it out of the park when it came to being a guest lecturer in my class," commented Professor Lupinacci. "As a professor I am keenly aware of when a speaker catches the attention and interest of the students. In this case Councilman Panico was not only interesting and engaging, but also put state and local government in a perspective that related very well to this honors class."
