Coram, NY – Brookhaven Highway Superintendent Daniel P. Losquadro and Councilman Neil Foley want to thank the law enforcement and emergency service experts who helped make the first Brookhaven Highway Safety Day a tremendous success. The event took place Saturday, September 19th and hundreds of residents participated. In the best interest of public safety, Superintendent Losquadro and Councilman Foley have decided to make this an annual event.

"It is very gratifying to see the extraordinary response we received from Brookhaven residents," Superintendent Losquadro said. "All aspects were well attended ranging from the child safety seat check and bicycle safety rodeo to the various highway safety demonstrations and interactive displays performed by law enforcement and emergency services. Most importantly, this event has prevented bad habits before they start and will help keep motorists and those who travel the roadways safe."

Approximately 100 children participated in the Bicycle Safety Rodeo and 33 child safety seats were inspected to ensure they provide the greatest protection possible.

"As a parent and a town councilman I was very happy to see how many children were involved," Councilman Foley said. "Participants not only received hands-on bicycle safety instruction inside Safety Town’s replica miniature village, they also had their helmets and bikes checked by Highway Department Division of Traffic Safety employees. Additionally, parents left with the confidence knowing their children will receive the maximum protection from their child safety seat."
