Deputy Supervisor / Councilwoman Kathleen Walsh speaks to students in Professor Jason Rose’s class at Suffolk County Community College.

Farmingville, NY - On April 12, Deputy Supervisor / Councilwoman Kathleen Walsh spoke to Professor Jason Rose’s "State and Local Politics" class at Suffolk County Community College's Ammerman Campus. Councilwoman Walsh shared her life story with the class and explained how she came to be involved in local government. She also discussed current issues facing the Brookhaven Town Council.

Councilwoman Walsh said "I was happy to be the guest lecturer in Professor Rose's class. It was encouraging to see all the young people who are interested in serving the community. Their enthusiasm gives me confidence that our future is in very good hands."

The students were provided with samples of legislation proposals and Councilwoman Walsh walked them through the local legislative process. Following the lecture, Councilwoman Walsh answered questions about the importance of bipartisanship and representing all of her constituents, regardless of background and party affiliation.
