Coram, NY - With the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) administering a winter weather advisory for Suffolk County today, Brookhaven Town Superintendent of Highways Daniel P. Losquadro wants residents to know his crews are prepared to handle the elements.

"Our town owned equipment is fully operational and outside vendors are supplementing our in house capabilities," Superintendent Losquadro said.

After being elected to lead the Highway Department in March, Superintendent Losquadro made emergency preparedness his top priority. "The staff I have assembled is experienced and ready to see Brookhaven Town through any adverse weather conditions," Superintendent Losquadro said.

Actions taken to improve the Department's response during adverse weather conditions include replacing old trucks and equipment with new inventory that will help keep town roads clear. Superintendent Losquadro has also revolutionized the Highway Department's operations by introducing technology that will track resources and expedite the work order process.

"This technology will allow my administration to see what areas have work order requests in real time," Superintendent Losquadro said. "By being able to track this information visually town wide, we can see where the problems areas are. This allows us to immediately redirect crews where more resources are needed and allocate resources with optimal efficiency."

The advisory is calling for snow accumulation of three to five inches, with higher amounts possible in different locations.

"I strongly advise for motorists to remain off the road," Superintendent Losquadro said. "The less cars there are on the road, the easier it is for our crews to operate and clear the roadways."
