Coram, NY - Brookhaven Superintendent of Highways Daniel P. Losquadro had crews out sanding and salting Town roadways at five a.m. before the first snowflake hit the pavement. The Department has also been coordinating with the Brookhaven Parks and Waste Management Departments to ensure their heavy duty equipment would be available if needed. Additionally, the Highway Department has hundreds of contractors at its disposal to clear roadways at a moment's notice.

"My administration has proactively maintained contact with our outside vendors to guarantee we will have all the resources needed to handle snow," Superintendent Losquadro said. "I am also asking residents to please limit travel to absolute necessities and emergencies. With the roadways clear, it makes it much easier for the Highway Department and other emergency services to operate and keep our streets safe."

"We have seen so many Highway Department trucks out in our neighborhoods both before and after it started snowing," said Philomena Reynolds of the Selden Civic Association. "They are really doing a great job keeping our roads clear and safe."
