Farmingville, NY - On Saturday, September 13, Councilwoman Connie Kepert attended the grand opening of the American Physical Society's (APS) new Editorial Office in Ridge. APS will utilize the new space to continue their work to advance and diffuse the knowledge of physics through outstanding research journals, scientific meetings, education, outreach, advocacy, and international activities. The office, which contains portions of the original building that were renovated as well as additional new office space, was built with artful architecture, energy efficient and green practices, and a focus on blending the space with the greenery of the surrounding environment.

"This expansion project represents the type of architecture that we want to encourage within the Town of Brookhaven. Kudos to the American Physical Society for having the foresight to invest in an expansion which is not only green, but which provides a comfortable productive place for its employees to conduct their important work," stated Councilwoman Kepert.
