Coram, NY - Brookhaven Town Superintendent of Highways Daniel P. Losquadro wants residents to know his Department has proactively planned for freezing temperatures. The National Weather Service in Upton, New York is reporting rain for Brookhaven Town most likely until early Monday afternoon. Temperatures are expected to drop steadily throughout the day and fall to about eight or nine degrees by 6 a.m. Tuesday morning, with wind chills reaching about twelve degrees below zero and wind gusts up to forty miles per hour.

"We will have all of our resources ready to be deployed should the need arise," Superintendent Losquadro said. "Crews are currently dealing with flooding issues throughout the Town to ensure these areas are addressed before freezing temperatures set in to provide a safe commute for tomorrow morning. Sand and salt were also delivered to Highway Department yards over the weekend and today to ensure we have enough material to handle any conditions."
