Farmingville, NY – Supervisor Ed Romaine and the Brookhaven Town Board have a case of World Series fever. In recognition of New York Mets starting pitcher and Ward Melville High School graduate Steven Matz, the Supervisor announced that a friendly wager has been placed with Mayor Frank D. Offut of Platte City, Missouri. Platte City shares a boundary with Kansas City, Kansas, home of the American League Champion Kansas City Royals.

The wager from Brookhaven Town includes a case of Blue Point Toasted Lager, an assortment of Long Island oysters and clams, several bottles of Long Island wines and a William Floyd High School Colonials tee-shirt. In response, Mayor Offut has wagered a six pack of BBQ sauces from various famous Kansas City BBQ restaurants, a case of Boulevard Beer, 25 lbs. of assorted BBQ meats including baby back ribs, beef ribs, burnt ends and brisket, and a Stroud's Chicken T-Shirt.

"Brookhaven Town is proud to have one of our own, homegrown stars in the World Series," said Supervisor Romaine. "It's been a while since the Mets appeared in the World Series and I can feel the excitement wherever I go. It's fun to have a friendly wager going, but when it comes to the World Series, it's 'Let's go Mets' all the way."

"Platte City appreciates the opportunity to welcome the Mets and their fans to the Kansas City area," Mayor Offutt stated, "We expect that they will enjoy the great food and hospitality of the Midwest, although we also hope they do not experience the thrill of victory."
